IT'S ABOUT TIME YOU SHOWED UP, PORKY. I DECIDED TO PAY YOU A SURPRISE VISIT! I CAN STAY FOR A WHOLE WEEK, AND THAT'LL JUST GIVE ME TIME ENOUGH TO TELL YOU ABOUT MY LATEST OPERATIONS!

"There!" sighed Petunia as she wiped her floury hands on her apron and surveyed her freshly baked chocolate layer cake with a critical eye. "That's the very best I can do!"

Porky eyed the mouth-watering creation hungrily. "If that cake doesn't bring the highest bid at the auction, our annual fund-raising bake sale will be a big flop as far as I'm concerned!"

But Petunia just couldn't share Porky's enthusiasm. "I wouldn't worry if it weren't for Prissy Putnam," she exclaimed as she carefully packed the cake in a box. "Somehow, Prissy always manages to get ahead of me. I wouldn't mind that so much, either, if she didn't have to brag and make unkind remarks about my efforts." Petunia put on her hat and tucked the box under her arm. "Prissy is entering one of her lemon meringue pies in the auction, and I just know she'll get the highest bid."

Porky took Petunia's arm as they left the house. "Not this time," he told her confidently. "You wait and see. This is one time Prissy Putnam won't make you play second fiddle."

The big hall at the Women's Club was crowded when Porky and Petunia arrived. The auction of baked goods was just about to begin. Porky and Petunia watched as Prissy Putnam's lemon pie drew the biggest bid so far, and they tried to ignore Prissy as she strutted around with a big smile on her face. Then the auctioneer held up Petunia's chocolate cake.

"What am I bid for this delicious cake?" he chanted. "Who will start the bidding?"

"Fifty cents!" shouted a voice from the audience. The bidding continued, finally getting up to two dollars . . . but there it stopped. And Prissy Putnam's lemon pie had brought three dollars!

"Going," announced the auctioneer, "going, going . . . "

"Four dollars!" barked a little man in a gray suit, and the whole audience gasped. Prissy Putnam's face fell as the auctioneer handed the cake to the little man.

"My cake brought the highest bid!" Petunia squealed excitedly.

"Didn't I tell you?" Porky nodded, grinning. "I knew it would."

By that time, a group of ladies had gathered around Petunia to congratulate her, and it was a few minutes before she looked for Porky again. He was behind one of the pillars, talking to someone, and Petunia headed towards him. Porky was handing some money to his companion. To her consternation, she saw that it was the man in the gray suit!

"Thanks for helping me out," Porky was saying. "Here's the four dollars you bid for the cake, and a dollar for your trouble!"

Petunia's eyes clouded with tears as she started to turn away, realizing what Porky had done. Then she stopped as she heard the little man's reply.

"This must be my lucky day!" he said. "I made a dollar from you, and just now I sold the cake to a man from one of the big flour companies for five dollars more! He says it's the finest chocolate cake he's eve seen. He's looking for the lady who baked it because he wants to buy the recipe from her!"

Just then, Porky turned guiltily and saw Petunia . . . smiling happily now.

"It's all right, Porky," she assured him. "It seems my cake really did win the honors after all!"
